I am happy to present the second issue of The Chronicle for the year 2013-14. A multi-faculty College that offers education from higher secondary certificate to research programs is decidedly a very complex organization. There are several cogs to such a machine all of which have to tick and in a coordinated manner. This requires most of all a competent channel of communication among the organs of the College. We at Ahmednagar College have periodically adopted various means of communication with all the stake holders which include face to face meetings, magazines and brochures. One of the instruments that has worked well in the past few years is the in-house bulletin, The Chronicle of Ahmednagar College. It is no wonder that The Chronicle is into its 10th year now.

Ahmednagar College is full of people and their activities throughout the year. Several of these do not come to every one's attention, though some of them are worth remembering. Through the medium of publications and bulletins, we can build a collective memory. But, I hope to expand on these and deploy the available technologies to build on a communication system that serves a large number of functions. I strongly believe that we can positively exploit such technology as social media to create channels of communication between and among students, faculty, alumni, employers and parents. It can surely enable greater synergy in the efforts put in by the various stake holders in college education.

Ahmednagar College has already taken up measures to digitize the resources. Digital communication is not only swift but also simple. Hence, I can imagine days when all of our communications have turned digital. Similarly, various processes of teaching and learning are now becoming digital in our College. Our students and our faculty are increasingly employing IT for the daily teaching leaning activities. This has enhanced their skills as also their competence in their chosen field.

We look forward to innovative projects in our College which will explore and exploit digital technologies to improve the core concern of teaching and learning.

God bless this great institution of ours.
